Brief Description of Undergraduate Courses Taught: (Course Title – Code: Description)

Networks and Communication Comp215N

Aims to provide the basic concept of computer networks and the protocols used to connect devices and addresses with basic applications for local and wide area networks. The course also identifies how to build on information services and facilitate it to users. (Prerequisite: Desktop software programs).

Computer skills Comp 102

This course introduces students to the basic concepts of computer components (hardware and software). Moreover, students will be able to use Windows 10, browse the web and search for information over the Internet. Also, they will be familiar with a variety of computer applications, including word processing, spreadsheets and presentations.

Office Software Comp 182N

This course looks at the following topics: computer operations, Microsoft Office software, Microsoft Windows and basic office programming required by computer users. This course covers the basics of Microsoft Office including Microsoft Word for processing documents, Excel for mathematical and table applications and PowerPoint for preparing and displaying presentations.

Organizational Behavior -MGMT 421

To improve the organizational performance, effective managers need to understand the interactions among employees at the workplace. This introductory course highlights contemporary principles in organizational behavior literature that ensure high performance in modern day work environments. The implications of individual and group behavior on effectiveness of organizations are discussed. Furthermore, the diverse perspectives from an employee as well as a leader, will enable learners to be a successful manager and an effective employee in their professional life. The course will be supported by additional case studies.

Database Concepts and Design MGMT 421

This course introduces students to basic database concepts. The course teaches students relational database terminology, as well as data modeling concepts, building Entity Relationship Diagrams (ERDs), and mapping ERDs. It introduces relational languages, and The Structured Query Language (SQL) is used to interact with a relational database and manipulate data within the database. Relational database systems are the main focus, but other types, including object-oriented databases, are studied. This course will also cover topics such as file organization, indexes, transactions and transaction management, concurrency control, and database recovery. Leveraging project-based learning techniques, students will create and work with projects which challenge them to design, implement, and demonstrate a database solution for a business or organization using modern software tools.
